

Local Exhaust Ventilation involves systems designed to capture contaminated air from a specific source by trapping an airborne contaminant at, or near, its source before the contaminant can escape into the work environment. Instead, the contaminated air flows into the exhaust system.